Brooktrails renews emergency declaration

Mike A'Dair

Reporter
mike@willitsweekly.com

Brooktrails residents' water use declined 27 percent in 2014, according to information provided by the township on Tuesday. In 2013, Brooktrails sold 80.13 million gallons of water, but that amount dropped to 58.4 million in 2014.

The township's board of directors again renewed a declaration of local emergency due to drought conditions, something it has done each month since January 2014.

According to Brooktrails General Manager Denise Rose, both township reservoirs are currently full. Her best estimate is they contain enough water to last 225 days, or until early December. Additional late

County budget: Allman draws line in the sand

Early retirements and recent resignations have depleted the ranks of the Mendocino County Sheriff's Department to the point that Sheriff Tom Allman says he has no alternative but to pull resident deputies back to more centralized locations, if a better contract from the county is not forthcoming.

Allman told negotiators he would reassign his deputies by April 26 if the situation has not improved. Currently the Sheriff's Office has outlying substations in Covelo, Laytonville, Anderson Valley, Point Arena and Potter Valley. Personnel from these substations would be reassigned to

Brooktrails fuel reduction project underway

CalFire Mendocino Unit hand crews are conducting a wildland fuel reduction project in Brooktrails Township.

Funded by a State Responsibility Area grant, the project's goal is to reduce hazardous fuels located within the greenbelt area managed by the Brooktrails Township Community Services District, says a press release from CalFire's Mendocino Unit.

CalFire crews are removing dead material and trimming live vegetation on approximately 52 acres adjacent to the township's

State water use restrictions: Implications loom for city

Zack Cinek

Reporter
zack@willitsweekly.com

What the City of Willits must do to comply with a state clampdown on water use remains to be seen.

Gov. Jerry Brown asked last month that urban potable water use be reduced 25 percent statewide.

A discussion about the governor's executive order took place at the city council's April 8 meeting.

City Manager Adrienne Moore said the city's number of water connections falls under the 3,000 connections needed to be designated an urban water supplier, but the city expects more information soon from the State Water Resources Control Board.

City Council supports a trail along the railroad

Zack Cinek

Reporter
zack@willitsweekly.com

The answer was "yes" when the city asked council members if they would support a trail along the railroad tracks from the high school to the new hospital – and maybe west to Blosser Lane, too.

City engineers are busy working on cost estimates this week, and expect the project to cost millions of dollars. With California Department of Transportation funding, the plan is to pursue funding a rails-with-trails style of project.

"That means the rail line is considered active, and the trail is alongside the

Trapper program under review

The Center for Biological Diversity announced Monday that Mendocino County Interim Counsel Doug Losak had agreed to a settlement in a lawsuit against the Integrated Wildlife Damage Management program, otherwise known as the county trapper program.

The lawsuit, filed in November 2014, claimed the county's trapper program was being implemented without any environmental review to assess if non-lethal options would work.

The suit was filed by Animal Legal Defense Fund, Animal Welfare Institute,

Drought measures have a blind spot

To the Editor:

We're all concerned about the critical drought conditions locally and statewide. The governor has issued restrictions. Residents are conserving. Some agriculture is threatened.

Caltrans has publicized measures they are undertaking to reduce their water usage statewide.

While I applaud Caltrans' conservation proposals, I believe now is also the time to reconsider the very water-intensive construction of the northern interchange as part of the Phase 1 Willits bypass. The northern interchange is designed for a future 4-lane freeway (Phase 2) that is extremely unlikely to ever happen. Because of this design, it paves over some 30 acres of wetlands that recharge the Little Lake Valley aquifer. In addition to potential long-term effects on water supply and flooding, just consider water use during construction this coming summer.

The interchange requires 900,000 cubic yards of fill to raise about three-quarters of a mile of roadway up to 30 feet high, plus constructing four extra bridges. (That amount of fill is estimated to take six months of nearly round-the-clock trucking.) As fill is dumped and spread, it is sprayed for dust control and compaction, requiring millions of gallons of water. Millions more gallons would be used to mix tons of cement for roadways and bridges. This water would be supplied from wells in the valley plus buying treated wastewater (which otherwise mostly recharges the aquifer) from the City of Willits.

A practical alternative exists, using the already-designed roundabout as the northern bypass connection. This option not only saves water – especially important this summer – but it could also save taxpayers' money, construction time, wetlands, and Native American sites. It's not yet too late to scale back this unnecessary interchange. All that is needed is the political will.

Come to "The Willits Bypass, Supersize or Downsize?" forum on Saturday, April 25, 4 pm at the Little Lake Grange, to learn more about these issues and what you can do!

Poisoning Little Lake

To the Editor:

A quote from Mike Sturm: foreman of Summer Breeze Ranch (Shamrock Artisan Goat Cheese): "If they do any spraying on the ditch fence there," Sturm said, "I'm going to get overdrift. And it's going to pollute the water. I never thought I would be an environmentalist," he added. "Our farm has been certified by the state as being organic, and if they do that, it's going to mess up our organic status bigtime. And as a former user – I've used all these chemicals – they stay in the ground, they don't go away, and they all cause cancer. I don't want to see them out there, and if there's some way we can stop it, I'd sure appreciate it." Willits Weekly, Thursday, March 19, 2015

Caltrans's industrial-scale poisoning campaign is coming to Little Lake Valley starting this summer, and there is nothing you can do about it. Caltrans says so. It is a brand-new component of the $50,000,000 mitigation package. Caltrans broke the news last year during Thanksgiving. Yeah.

For the first stage, almost 70 acres of poison will be applied, three times a month for five months for several years, a.k.a. 15 times a year. The valley has never been subjected to this amount of poison ever! Compared to the usages of poisons in other valleys in the county, Little Lake can be regarded as a virgin. And it is going to happen just in time for football practice, rodeos and the Kinetic Carnival.

And this is just for the Roundup/Glyphosate for the intrusive blackberries. These are going to be poisoned so that precious indigenous plants can replace them. In addition, there are bee-killing insecticides and rodenticides to protect the precious plants so they don't get eaten by vermin. So from the very outset, these precious plants – the reason for this chemical carnage – are going to be planted in pre-poisoned ground, and continue to be dosed with poisons for years until they get established. That's insane. It was never supposed to be this way. It was supposed to be the exact opposite.

Previously, not a drop of poison was going to be used. The final report (2006) – essentially what the city and county signed onto – left no room for doubt. "Herbicides would not be used since Caltrans does not use herbicides in Mendocino County." see page 10: [http://www.dot.ca.gov/dist1/d1/projects/willits/signed\_rod\_for\_willits\_bypass\_project.pdf]

Common questions and misconceptions.

- "I heard there will be herbicide spraying on the bypass property."
- "There will be no herbicide spraying used on the bypass project."

Caltrans biologists prated this mitigation project as virtuous and green as often as they could. No herbicides. Instead, Caltrans was going to dispatch the blackberries by covering them with plastic tarps. The mitigation was heralded as a magnificent experiment: terra-forming new wetlands to replace wetlands that were destroyed for the bypass.

For Caltrans biologist Chris Collison (quoted in a May 2013 story by Kym Kemp on the Lost Coast Outpost blog): "I'm quite proud of the work we're doing for the salmon. [The] wetlands are actually going to be improved."

"To offset impact," he says, "we worked on ways to help species survive.... Forever, now, no one can use herbicide on that area.... We now control how to use those lands for the health and well-being of that species." Journalist Kemp notes: "Collison describes an attempt by the agency to protect the land around the bypass as if the area were a park."

<http://lostcoastoutpost.com/2013/may/15/battle-little-lake-valley-debating-willits-bypass/>

But just as we were getting ready to sit down for Big Bird, this appeared on the FAQ page:

"There will be no herbicides used on the bypass project right of way, but there will be limited use of herbicides on mitigation parcels to eliminate the non-native invasive Himalayan blackberry."

The biologists have been silent for maybe a year since they found out that a massive poisoning campaign is to be added to their heroic non-poison approach to manufacturing wetlands. They have not even requested some kind of biological impact study.

Do biologists have a working baseline to assess the before-and-after effects on Little Lake Valley from the poisoning? I would imagine probably not; it was never discussed during planning because: "Herbicides would not be used since Caltrans does not use herbicides in Mendocino County."

How will the poison campaign alter the biologists' mitigation designs, methods and their population projections for the salmon, birds, indigenous plants, my dog Spot, and on down to the microbial level? What will be the biological consequences of flooding and runoff? The biologists don't know. They didn't have to.

And there is nothing you can do about it except breathe and obey and pretend the poison does not matter?

'Mestizo Mysteries'

Above: Members of Nuestra Alianza met at the Little Lake Grange Friday night to wrap up plans for this weekend's event.

The Nuestra Alianza de Willits cordially invites the community to this educational – and entertaining – forum on Saturday, April 18 from 11 am to 3 pm at the Willits Community Center.

"Mestizo Mysteries" is a partnership between Nuestra Alianza de Willits, Tina Tyler-O'Shea (a Willits resident and Sonoma State University student), and the Willits Police Department, to raise funds for the Alianza's programs and to encourage cross-cultural activities in Willits. "This is the first time we've done something like this," said Ray Perez, president of Nuestra Alianza. "It will be a learning experience."

Some Alianza members will tell stories about their first impressions of the United States, or how they traveled here. Others will demonstrate how to make enchiladas, horchata, flan and handmade tortillas, which will be served at the end of the program. Young dancers will perform traditional Mexican dances, and everybody can learn the Cumbia, a Colombian country dance.

"We're trying to be involved and put ourselves out there in the community," Alianza member Alexandra said. "Sometimes we don't get the opportunity to meet other people, and we get the wrong idea about who they are. This will give us the opportunity to talk to each other about our experiences."

Tickets at the door are $15. – Jennifer Poole

Honorable Mendocino County Board of Supervisors
 C/O Marijuana Legalization Ad Hoc
 Low Gap Rd.
 Ukiah, CA 95482

RE: Plant Count Increase Pros and Cons Evaluation
 Dear Members of the Board and Committee,

Thank you for your efforts thus far in diligently reviewing the rather large topic of Marijuana Legalization and potential effects on Mendocino County. Your efforts are proactive and necessary for the economic well-being of our rural community.

It is with urgency we make this formal request to the Board of Supervisors to direct County Council to reach out to the Regional U.S. Attorney General, Melinda Haag, regarding amicable plant caps on medical marijuana cultivation in Mendocino County. Our neighboring counties with higher plant caps and no Department of Justice objection include Lake County plant cap at 48, Sonoma County plant cap at 30 and Humboldt County relying on the District Attorney position of 99 or less without regulation. It is in Mendocino County's best economic interest to direct County Council to inquire with Ms. Haag if such neighboring plant caps in regulation would suffice for Mendocino County.

The Small Farmers Association believes allowing Mendocino entrepreneurs to prepare for upcoming legalization with plant counts more in line with our neighboring producer Counties will help feed all small business in Mendocino County. It will also assist Mendocino County in gaining back their role as a leader in an industry that provides the majority of economic buying power in our County. The SFA has requested the plant count cap be increased to 50 plants...two more plants than Lake County and twenty more plants than Sonoma County.

For your convenience, we have initiated a list of pros and cons to plant cap increases to utilize in your evaluation of a plant count increase in Mendocino County. This list does not include any objection from the federal government:

PROS	CONS
50 plants is sustainable in drought. Please review our Drought Policy attached.	Some may not realize 50 plants is sustainable in a drought.
90% of the time all 50 plants won't survive the entire growing season, resulting in real time plant count less than 50.
With legal access to water, if there is less water, there will be less plants, allowing nature to create it's own cap on all agricultural commodities.
County Economy is suffering at an alarming rate. With any farming commodity, increase yields or herds most often results in increased profit for that small business.
Increased plant count with increased small business profits means increased tax dollars to the County.
Increased plant count results in increased yield or herds resulting in more new jobs.	The reduction to 25 plants and the hold at that count is creating a pool of unemployed people that are trying to find jobs in other sectors of business with no result...The cost to the County through entitlements is increased.
Increased plant count providing more jobs in the community results in more productive citizens in the County.
An increased plant county will provide an economic surge in purchasing of products from small businesses, giving some economic relief to small businesses and increase sales tax revenue to the County.
No other agricultural crop has a cap on how much can be grown. Increasing the plant count moves us further into the realm of real agriculture, again preparing the county for future commercialization of this agricultural commodity.
With looming legalization/commercialization, small farmers and business entrepreneurs will be allowed to prepare for what is to come with an increased plant count, so they might position themselves to survive the transition.	No plant count increase will illuminate small farmers as they will not be able to prepare and position themselves to survive the upcoming legalization/commercialization.

Whether you are a medical cannabis user or not, we all make up the Community of Mendocino County and act as a community together. Churches, hospitals, vacuum cleaner repair shops, schools, etc. do not use medical cannabis and benefit financially from it, with the majority of their income coming from the cannabis industry. The cannabis industry keeps small businesses open in rural producer counties.

We have been the leader with the 9.31 Program, and we believe with the recent regional summit initiated by Mendocino County, we are moving toward becoming a leader again in this up and coming industry. A plant count increase will assist in bringing us into the leadership realm once more. It will also help salvage what is left of the local small business industry that has thrived for centuries and placed Mendocino County in the top small town places to live in the Country. Without an increase, our rural values and lifestyle are challenged by corporate interests, large and small, who are on our doormat, positioning themselves to take Mendocino County rural values into their hands and shape them to their liking.

Please let the SFA know if there is anything else we can supply for your further evaluation and recommendations.

New healing practice in Willits

Acupuncture without needles? Yes! K.C. Chamberlain, certified massage therapist, uses "tuning forks" instead of needles in her new Willits-based healing business, K.C.'s Heart & Hands.

Chamberlain, who trained at the Heartwood Institute in Garberville, has been practicing therapeutic bodywork since 2004. The primary focus of her practice is the healing modalities of Zen Shiatsu acupressure and Acutonics Tuning Forks.

Both these techniques are grounded in Chinese Medicine and use the acupuncture meridians and points for assessment and treatment.

But she also uses natural healing herbs and oils, informed by years of experience as a trained herbalist with western and Chinese herbs, especially her beloved lavender: Chamberlain was co-owner of the former Harvest Moon Farms Lavender in Laytonville for many years.

"I love connecting with people, listening to their needs and tailoring their healing treatments to meet them," Chamberlain said. "My goal is to empower folks by supporting them to develop good self-care habits that lead to greater health and wellness. I am continually inspired by how quickly our bodies can return to balance and harmony through simple, natural practices like food therapy, acupressure and herbs."

Acutonics Tuning Forks are a unique, non-invasive approach to healing that is rooted in Oriental medicine and uses sound to move energy. Think of the forks as "acupuncture without needles." Precision-calibrated tuning forks are applied to specific acupuncture and acupressure points. The sound waves of the forks are profoundly relaxing, and their vibration travels deeply into the body along energy pathways, affecting the body/mind/spirit and stimulating the body's innate healing capacity, promoting wellness, deep inner harmony, health and balance.

Zen Shiatsu acupressure is a form of Asian bodywork therapy, which uses traditional Asian techniques and treatment strategies to treat the human body, emotions, mind, energy field, and spirit for the promotion, maintenance, and restoration of health.

Chamberlain is completing her clinical studies in acupuncture with Diane Smalley, licensed acupuncturist. Appointments can be scheduled on Fridays at Abundant Health Acupuncture and Herbs, 750 Central Avenue, and on Mondays at Willits Chiropractic, 1225 South Main Street. For more info about scheduling a session and about the benefits of Asian bodywork therapy, contact K.C. Chamberlain at 707-621-0056 or kchmf@mcn.org.

 The Story: James King (Will Ferrell) is an uber-rich Wall Streeter framed on a charge of fraud. Darnell (Kevin Hart), works in the parking lot of King's skyscraper office building where he has been washing King's ostentatiously expensive automobiles for years. King gets convicted and sentenced to San Quentin so he hires Darnell to teach him how to be tough enough to survive.
 My Thoughts: Though predictable, there are some funny set pieces, and Kevin Hart is a serious maniac of a comic. Hart and Ferrell are on screen in pretty much all of the scenes; they pair well as comedians.
 So, the white guy is lame...totally. The black guy has good instincts and "knows the street." That's all pretty much a cliché. But as I said, the guys are funny.
 Parents: Not for children. There are blow-job jokes, some brief nudity, gay jokes...cartoonish violence...

gives talks on Buddhist psychology
 Lama Lodu Rinpoche, a Buddhist master in the Tibetan Vajrayana tradition, gives two talks at the Muse in Willits on April 25 and 26, on the topics of "Working with the Self – Taming the Mind" and "Working with Others – Opening the Heart."
 Born in 1942 in Sikkim, in the foothills of the Himalayas, Lama Lodu Rinpoche entered Rumtek Monastery at the age of 8 and received a traditional Tibetan Buddhist education under many of the most renowned teachers of his day, including His Holiness the 16th Gyalwang Karmapa and His Eminence Kalu Rinpoche. His training included a rigorous three-year solitary retreat in the remote mountains of northern India.
 Rinpoche was part of the first wave of Tibetan Buddhists to teach in the West, arriving in San Francisco in the early 1970s to create one of the first centers for Tibetan Buddhist studies in the U.S. He has taught meditation and Buddhist philosophy for four decades to western and Asian students, with a down-to-earth style that reflects humor, kindness and insight.
 The talks will be held at the Muse, 30 East San Francisco Street, from 10 am until noon both days. Private interviews with Lama Lodu Rinpoche will be available following the talks each day. The talks are free and open to all. Info: call 707-456-9425 or visit www.kdk.org.

Resentment

Doris Wier
Columnist

Dear Doris:

What do you do when you feel envious or resentful of the good things that are happening for your partner, when you really want to feel pride and pleasure and happiness at your partner's success?

K.

Dear K.:

Congratulations on being so honest with yourself by noticing what you actually feel, despite the fact that you would like to feel differently. That you can acknowledge what is really going on in your heart and mind is courageous and healthy.

The fact that you are feeling some resentment tells me that you may have let slip your own desires and dreams for a while. Perhaps you have been supporting your partner in his/her endeavors to achieve success by ignoring your own desires?

If so, I think it is time for you to take a closer look at what feels unfulfilled in your life. What are your dreams regarding your career and personal life? Do you have any projects that you have put on hold, such as a special training on a subject close to your heart, traveling, writing, or giving one of your hobbies more attention?

In my personal life and work, I use jealousy as an indicator of what we ourselves would like to be doing, being, or accomplishing. It is important that we allow ourselves to explore our own needs regarding success and fulfillment. We can use our jealousy as an inspiration to expand ourselves and move forward. I'm sure your partner had to take some risks to get where he or she is today, and so will you in order to live your dreams.

I recommend that you first figure out what it is you would like to accomplish: how you would like to grow yourself and Willits' Centennial Reservoir was looking almost topped up as of Tuesday morning, after the April 5 and 6 rainstorm which dumped somewhere between 1.5 and 1.8 inches of rain in the Willits and Brooktrails. Other pictures Willits Weekly has published during this drought have shown the dead tree in the center right of this photo surrounded by dry lakebed. City of Willits Director of Public Works Rod Wilbum told city council members last week that, overall, the city's water storage is about 1,200 acre feet, up from 1,150 acre feet January 1. He said the city's total capacity for storage is 1,300 acre feet.

Greywater

Jerry Jordan
Columnist

Although my specialty is drip irrigation, I advocate all sorts of water conservation methods. Greywater is a great option for reusing water productively to irrigate landscaping plants and trees. Greywater comes from sinks, showers and washing machines. Because of dirt, bacteria, lint, soap residue or other particulates it is classified as unsafe to drink or ingest (non-potable).

The simplest way to use greywater is to have a 5 gallon bucket in the bathroom to collect shower or bath water. You can scoop that waste water out and use it to irrigate the landscaping plants in your yard. If you capture water that is used in rinsing produce or the dishes in your kitchen sink, the same thing applies.

Another common way to use greywater is the "Laundry-to-Landscape" system. This taps the used water from your washing machine for landscape irrigation. If you have relatively easy access to your drainpipes, you can plumb a three-way valve from your washer's drain outlet. This allows greywater to flow outside to your landscaping when you need it, or back into the sewer or septic system when you don't.

Laundry-to-Landscape (L2L) systems generally do not require a special permit in Mendocino County, but there are guidelines that must be followed. Your lines can't be run too close to a creek or well. You can't have an outlet that flows into a neighbor's yard. Powdered detergents don't work for L2L systems. Liquid detergents must be plant-friendly - without salts, boron or bleach. Greywater cannot be allowed to pool on the ground, so it requires mulch basins (sunken areas that are typically filled with wood chips or straw) that allow it to penetrate into the soil. For the full list of requirements, you can go to the Mendocino County Gray Water System Guidelines, available online.

If you find any of this confusing or daunting, then you might want to attend one of the regular workshops put on by Greywater Action, based in Sonoma County. They teach hands-on workshops several times a year. A man named Art Ludwig is considered the pioneer of the Laundry-to-Landscape method. He has books, videos and articles on the subject that are readily available.

Laura Allen of Greywater Action has a new book called "The Water-Wise Home," that has plenty of information to guide you through the process of designing and installing your own greywater system. This is available locally at The Book Juggler and through the Mendocino County Library. Or look on the Greywater Action website for certified installers, if you would prefer to hire someone else to do the work.

An important point about greywater is that it is not compatible with drip irrigation. Due to soap residue and lint in the water, it has so much particulate matter that it would clog a drip system. Greywater needs to move through larger tubing and should not touch the edible plants in your major stations in Willits, Ukiah and Fort Bragg.

Currently the Deputy Sheriffs Association, which represents 40 deputies, is feeling pinched from the 10 percent salary reduction it agreed to in July 2010. The county has not yet agreed to return employees' salaries to 2009 levels, even though it now boasts a General Reserve Fund of $10.3 million, the highest sum in Mendocino County history.

However, according to Assistant County Executive Officer Alan Flora, it would cost the county $11.2 million to give back that 10 percent cut to all county employees. At the March 3 mid-year budget review, it was announced the county expects to have a budget carryover of $859,541 for fiscal year 2014-15.

Allman said county administration has heard his argument and made the DSA an offer. He was not at liberty to discuss details, but said the DSA would vote on that offer in late April.

Allman's budgeted staff of deputy sheriffs consists of 43 positions. Three are currently vacant, three deputies have retired in the past 90 days, and last week two more deputies quit. That means the department is down eight deputies, or 18.6 percent.

"My guys are still under that 10 percent cut. That means some of them are going out there at 2 o'clock in the morning and arresting the bad guys for $19 an hour. Is that right?" Allman said.

"My goal is to get us back up in staffing, so we can get our resident deputies back out there and hopefully improve the quality of life in those communities," he said.

garden because of bacteria that could make you sick. I recommend greywater specifically for landscaping plants and trees (including fruit trees). In my vegetable garden, I use only potable water or rainwater in a drip system.

Rainwater is an ideal water-saving option, if you are able to collect it. This is sometimes called "dirty water" due to particulates from the atmosphere that it picks up. However, I have been harvesting rainwater for over a decade, and running it through my drip systems without any problem.

In fact, because my well water is high in minerals, I find rainwater to be superior. It does not cause mineral build-up inside the drip lines. My rainwater supply lasts through most of the summer gardening season, and the plants love it.

Reusable water sources are key in surviving and thriving in the drought conditions we face. You can start simply, read articles or books, check out online tutorials, take a class, or hire a professional to help you build a system that will work for your needs.

Jerry Jordan has been working in the field of water conservation for over 30 years. He and his wife, Cheryl, have a Facebook page called "Driplines: Adventures with Drip Irrigation," where they regularly share information about water-wise gardening.

water supply system, including redwood water tanks, the water treatment plant, and "along a community trail system which could serve as firebreaks or control lines in the event of a wildfire."

Dead woody material and ladder fuels are being removed, trees less than 6 inches in diameter are being thinned to a minimum spacing of 10 feet, and trees are being pruned to a height of 10 feet above ground level.

Crews will use hand tools and chainsaws to execute the work, which is expected to be completed by June 30.

Vegetation removal is consistent with Brooktrails Fire Department hazard abatement standards.

"Overall, the project will reduce fuel loads and promote forest health," the press release states. "Woody material generated by the project will be chipped on site."

The wood chips will be laid along the greenbelt to help prevent erosion, Brooktrails Fire Department Deputy Chief Jon Noyer told Willits Weekly.

The department will not make the chips available to Brooktrails residents who might want to replace their lawns with more drought-friendly materials, Noyer said, because of the increased fire danger wood-chip landscaping represents.

This report was based on a press release from CalFire's Mendocino Unit.

expand your life. You might do that alone or explore possibilities with your partner, depending on how you process things as a couple. In any case, share your discoveries with your partner, and ask if she or he would be supportive of the changes you have in mind. I am fairly confident your partner will be more than happy to be there for you. When you feel more fulfilled yourself, you may be able to enjoy your partner's success as you wish to do now. Hopefully, the two of you will have many future successes to celebrate together.

I almost forgot. If you contributed to your partner's success by carrying most of the daily load for a while, give yourself a big pat on the shoulder. Holding the space free for him or her is huge. I'm sure your partner is aware of it too. On that note, you already have a lot to celebrate together.

Solar Everything!

A free workshop on solar applications at Wowser

There are roughly 1,000 watts of equivalent energy in a 3-foot by 3-foot patch of sunlight at midday in Mendocino County. No energy source on the planet can compete with solar energy. Planet-wide, there is more power in the sunlight that strikes the earth in one day than all of humankind consumes in three years' time.

The first step in tapping this source is learning what the sun's energy can do for you. Solar applications include: ● electricity (PV); ● hot water for domestic household uses; ● dehydration of fruit, veggies, etc.; ● distillation of water; ● cooking and baking; ● air-heating of spaces; ● radiant water-heating of spaces; ● concentration for high heat; and ● water pumping, wells and springs. Most of these applications lend themselves to inexpensive owner-builder designs and construction using simple materials, tools and skills.

Want to learn more? Attend the "Solar Everything!" workshop at Wowser, 330 East Commercial Street, on Monday, April 20 from 6 to 8 pm. Free seminar, slide show and displays by Michael Hackleman. A homebuilt solar food dehydrator and a solar water-heating collector will be on display. For more info, contact Wowser at 459-9697 or www.wowser.org, or Hackleman at michael.hackleman@gmail.com.

Neil Morgan Elliott

May 11, 1920 – April 8, 2015
Neil Elliott of Willits passed away peacefully April 8, 2015 at Holy Spirit, Willits.

Born in Chicago, Illinois, Neil came to California as a youth and graduated from UCLA. He became interested in advertising soon out of college and wrote advertising copy for many large advertising agencies before opening his agency in Los Angeles.

After several years he was offered a position as a spokesperson on television for Apex Technical School in New York flying back and forth every month. He became well-known as "Mr. Apex Man."

Because of his frequent flying, he and his wife of 65 years, Amy, traveled to many foreign countries.

Neil and Amy spent their early years together sailing their small boats and making many trips to Catalina. When they started their family, they substituted horses for sailboats. The reason they moved to Willits in 1986: more room for their horses.

Neil is survived by his wife, Amy, and their children: Paul (Mary) and Dan (Anita) Elliott; grandchildren: Morgan, Franklin, Benjamin Elliott; Maggie (Vilje) Vilponnen; Erik (Sarah) Gijon; Amy (Richard) Ortiz; Brian (Gina) Barth; Eric (Wendy) Barth; and Holly and Heather O'Neil; great-grandchildren: Dylan (Bryanna) Gijon; Nikolai Vilponnen, Rosie O'Neil, Nathan and Andrew Barth, and Elia and Annalise Barth.

California's drought: Bad and getting worse

Editor's note: Information for this article was gathered from a variety of sources.

California must gather better water-use data, and establish clearer priorities and better drought-management planning if it's going to weather future droughts better than it's doing now, according to a report by the Public Policy Institute of California.

Released in late March, the report came as the state entered its fourth year of drought and Californians continued to fall short of Gov. Jerry Brown's 25 percent conservation target.

The Public Policy Institute report calls for sweeping policy changes, such as stricter oversight of groundwater and charging wasteful users higher water rates.

"If we'd already taken some of these actions, there would be more water in our reservoirs and our underground aquifers today," said Peter Gleick, president of the Pacific Institute, a think tank in Oakland. "Droughts aren't going away, we're going to see more and more extreme weather."

Based on lessons learned from Australia's epic Millennium Drought — which parched the land down under from 1995 to 2012 — California should invest in tracking its water with accurate measurements of flow, quality, storage and use, the Public Policy Institute report says. The state can't manage its water fairly, transparently and flexibly without a clear picture of what it has.

"Our water accounting system is primitive considering that we're the technological leader of the world — there's significant disconnect here," said Jeffrey Mount, a Public Policy Institute senior fellow and one of the report's authors.

Cities and farms must manage demand better and develop reliable supplies, the report found. That means reducing urban irrigation — by installing more efficient watering systems and replacing lawns with less-thirsty plants — and promoting conservation with higher per-gallon water rates for heavy users.

Local water agencies should keep investing in recycled water and stormwater capture projects. And the California Legislature should do more to manage pumping rights and trading of groundwater so aquifers aren't depleted, the report says.

Avoiding depletion of the aquifers should be a priority, Gleick agreed. "Our groundwater situation right now is a free-for-all, and the only people who benefit are those with the deepest pockets and the deepest wells. It's unfair, it's inequitable, it's damaging for the environment, and it just can't continue."

In fact, hundreds of rural San Joaquin Valley residents no longer can get drinking water from their home faucets because California's extreme drought has dried up their individual wells, according to government officials and community groups.

The situation has become so dire the Tulare County Office of Emergency Services had 12-gallon-per person rations of bottled water delivered last Friday in East Porterville, where at least 182 of the 1,400 households have reported having no or not enough water, according to the Porterville Recorder.

Many people in the unincorporated community about 52 miles north of Bakersfield also have been relying on a county-supplied 5,000-gallon water tank filled with non-potable water for bathing and flushing toilets, The Recorder said.

Emergency Services Director Andrew Lockman, said the supplies of bottled water distributed by firefighters, the Red Cross and volunteer groups cost the county $30,000 and were designed to last about three weeks, but are only a temporary fix. To get future deliveries, officials are asking low-income residents to apply for aid and for companies to make bottled water donations.

Officials said the problem is partly due to the shallowness of some residential wells in East Porterville that are replenished by groundwater from the Tule River, according to the Fresno Bee. But river flows are way down due to the ongoing drought, leaving some wells dry.

Assemblyman Marc Levine, who chairs the Water, Parks and Wildlife Committee, said the political will in Sacramento "matches the sense of urgency that all Californians share."

However, an appellate court ruling this week could toss a monkey wrench into Brown's goal, according to the Los Angeles Times.

The governor's April 1 mandate to cut water use from 2013 levels ordered California water agencies to adopt pricing structures that encourage conservation. That means charging higher rates to people who use the most water.

However, state law prohibits water agencies from charging more for water than the cost of producing and delivering it, and a group of San Juan Capistrano residents has challenged the city's rate structure, arguing tiered pricing violates Proposition 218, a 1996 law intended to prevent local governments from gouging taxpayers. That law prohibits agencies from charging customers more than the "cost of the service" provided.

A superior court judge agreed, declaring the city's rate structure invalid in 2013. Since that ruling, the city has flattened its tiers and tied charges more directly to water costs while awaiting an appellate court decision.

The appeals court is expected to rule in the case this week, and its decision could have major implications for agencies that use, or are considering adopting, tiered rates.

The court could return a narrow ruling that pertains only to San Juan Capistrano, or it could invalidate tiered rates entirely, according to the Times. More likely, the court will take a middle road, reminding water districts they must explicitly tie water charges to actual service costs.

Some two-thirds of California water agencies use some type of tiered structure, which charge less for low usage and more as use increases.

Stephanie Pincett, director of the California Center for Sustainable Communities at UCLA, believes "tiered water rates are crucial to conservation."

"Rates are likely to increase no matter how the San Juan Capistrano case is decided," she said, "and tiered rates are a more equitable way to charge for water use."

In Mendocino County, a press release this week from the county's Health and Human Services Agency reminds North County residents "the last three years have been California's driest consecutive years in history, and this winter's wet season left much to be desired."

Some inland county residents may take comfort in the fact Lake Mendocino is currently at 79 percent of capacity, and that's "a huge improvement from our level of 47 percent this time last year," the HHSA press release states. The higher lake level has changed the county's U.S. Drought Monitor status from "extreme" to "severe."

But more needs to be done, because California's drought has depleted snow packs, rivers, and lakes, "and groundwater use has soared to make up the shortfall," said Dennis Dimmick, National Geographic's executive editor for the environment. A Stanford University report concluded "nearly 60 percent of the state's water needs are now met by groundwater, up from 40 percent in years when normal amounts of rain and snowfall."

"Groundwater comes from aquifers — spongelike gravel- and sand-filled underground reservoirs — and we see this water only when it flows from springs and wells," Dimmick explained. The United States relies on this hidden — and shrinking — water supply "to meet half our needs, and as drought shrinks surface water in lakes, rivers, and reservoirs, we rely on groundwater from aquifers even more."

"We are drawing down these hidden, mostly nonrenewable groundwater supplies at unsustainable rates," Dimmick said, calling disappearing groundwater an "out-of-sight crisis."

In most years, he said, shallower aquifers recharge as rainfall and streamflow seep into unpaved ground. But during drought years, the water table — the depth at which water is found below the surface — drops as water is pumped from the ground faster than it can recharge.

Central Valley wells that used to strike water at 500 feet deep must now be drilled down 1,000 feet or more, at a cost of more than $300,000 for a single well. And as aquifers are depleted, the land also begins to sink.

Unlike residents in other western states, Dimmick noted, "Californians know little about their groundwater supply because well-drilling records are kept secret from public view, and there is no statewide policy limiting groundwater use. California property owners can pump as much water as they want from under the ground they own."

In an effort to ease the state's current drought, Gov. Brown, in partnership with local governments, plans to replace 50 million square feet of lawns throughout the state with drought-tolerant landscaping; create a temporary, statewide consumer rebate program to replace old appliances with more water- and energy-efficient models; require campuses, golf courses, cemeteries and other large landscapers to make significant cuts in water use; prohibit new homes and developments from irrigating with potable water unless water-efficient drip irrigation systems are used; and ban watering of ornamental grass on public street medians.

Mendocino County cities and water districts will be responsible for enforcing the new regulations and are required to report violators to the California State Water Resources Board.

Moore expects the water board to give a mandate to the city. "We are certain there will be implications for small-size communities like Willits," Moore said.

Part of 2013 and 2014 were times of water rationing for the city.

The most recent action happened in October 2014, when the city enacted Stage 1 of its water-rationing ordinance.

With present Stage 1 rationing in effect, the city seeks a 20 percent water savings through voluntary actions.

While in Stage 1, the city has asked Willits water-users to irrigate during morning and evening hours and wash their cars using a hose with a shut-off nozzle, while fire hydrants will be reserved for fighting fires.

Low rainfall during the winter of 2013/2014 meant conditions at the city's two reservoirs were dire enough to start work on an emergency water treatment plant.

Director of Public Works Rod Wilburn said the city's water storage is at about 1,200 acre feet, up from 1,150 acre feet on January 1. He said the city's total capacity for storage is 1,300 acre feet.

The emergency supply project will pipe well water to a new treatment plant near the city sewer plant on the valley floor.

The building that houses the treatment equipment is completed, but the city has lost its well-driller and needs to secure the services of another driller.

Other aspects of the governor's order have caught the city's interest, noted in a report from City Hall.

Brown aims to replace 50 million square feet of lawns throughout the state with drought-tolerant landscaping in partnership with local governments.

Councilwoman Holly Madrigal talked about the possibility of letting the grass go brown west of the Highway 20 stoplight where the city maintains a grassy area on the side of the road.

"If we did not water the Highway 20 park, that might get us to it," said Wilburn.

Brown's order also called for an old-appliances rebate program, no irrigating with potable water at new homes or developments without drip irrigation, a ban on watering grass on public street medians, and a call for water agencies to make rate structures with conservation pricing.

Brown also called for updating standards for toilets, faucets and residential landscaping in communities, with a charge to take action against communities that ignore these standards.

"Ukiah has worked through a lot of those hurdles — I think they have gotten it done," Madrigal said.

Stranske talked about the frequency of cars carrying bicycles that he sees on Main Street, and the appeal of the dog park for travelers seeking a respite.

"I think this is a real opportunity to get our community on the map," said Stranske.

City officials met with the Mendocino County Council of Governments leading up to the council meeting last week to talk about the application.

MCOG director Phil Dow said he garnered funding for a Covelo project in the previous funding cycle.

Dow estimated that filling out the application for the money would take 40 to 60 hours.

"I locked myself in the office for two weeks and completed the application," Dow said about the Covelo application. "Applying for funds — as I said — is a little bit onerous."

Council members considered the 10-foot-width of the trail, time spent applying, and engineering estimates.

Councilwoman Madge Strong asked if there will be another funding cycle next year, too.

"Well — the government is running it, so you tell me," said Dow, who went on to say he thought the program would be around in the future.

With consideration given to accident data and schools nearby, MCOG believes the city's application could be a strong contender.

"Let us see if we can get our act together. It is a short timeframe — we will come up with something," Dow said.

If the city decides to include Walnut Street, along the old Remco property, in the trail project, or go west all the way to Blosser Lane, the city would need to hold a public meeting since Walnut Street was not in an older study the city has ready for projects like this.

Chamber of Commerce Director Lisa Epstein pledged the chamber's support to organize a community meeting.

The city's application to Caltrans' Active Transportation Program is due June 1.

spring rains could add to the water supply in both reservoirs.

Last year in mid-April, Rose noted, Brooktrails had sufficient water for 150 days, adding that in 2014 the township received considerable rainfall in late April.

The board set the cap for daily use for single-family residences at 200 gallons per day, or 6,000 gallons a month.

Tuesday's short meeting was highlighted by general congratulations over a March 24 settlement of the lawsuit against the City of Willits concerning the city's sewer plant.

General Counsel Christopher Neary thanked and congratulated each board member for having the courage and determination to see the dispute through to a successful resolution.

Rose thanked former Brooktrails General Manager Mike Phelan, who was instrumental in creating a climate in which a compromise could be reached.

Board member Ralph Santos thanked Neary. "We wouldn't have gotten this far if it wasn't for you," Santos said.

Directors also scheduled public hearings for two routine items: the water availability charge of $30 per parcel and the sewer stand-by charge of $50 per parcel.

Public hearings on these items were scheduled for the board's April 28 meeting.

The settlement stipulates that after reviewing the current status of the IWDW program, and after hearing about alternative control methods, "the county will consider whether to renew, modify or eliminate the IWDW program, including but not limited to whether to renew or reapprove the agreements, or enter into revised agreements with Wildlife Services for the purpose of implementing the IWDW program, or whether to pursue alternative means and methods for implementing the IWDW program that do not involve Wildlife Services."

The settlement goes on to state: "In the event the county elects to renew or modify the IWDW program, the county agrees to comply with CEQA prior to taking any such action."

The agreement also provides that the county will pay attorney's fees of $5,000 to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs will file a motion to have the case dismissed within five days of the date both parties fulfill the terms of the agreement.

The county also agreed to provide

Girl Scouts plant 75 redwood seedlings

The girls in Girl Scout Troop 151 planted 75 redwood seedlings last month in Brooktrails, near the Lake Emily Dam.

The troop collaborated with the Brooktrails Township and the Golden State Land Conservancy on this "Take Action" project.

When the girls arrived at 1 pm, holes for the trees had already been dug, with grass cleared around each hole, said Golden State Land Conservancy President Bob Whitney. The girls planted each seedling with native soil, and placed wood chip mulch around the perimeter. A small bamboo stake was planted with each seedling, for support, and the girls watered each tree they planted with a bucket of water from the stream.

"My troop took on this task after completing the third 'Journey' in the Girl Scout Brownie series," said troop leader Saprina Rodriguez. "During the past two years, these girls have been working on the Brownie Quest Award. They've learned about natural resources, the 'Wonders of Water' and the 'Wonders of the Forest,' and how to conserve them. Today they completed their Take Action plan and made the world a better place!

"A big thank you from Girl Scout Troop 151 to Golden State Land Conservancy and the Brooktrails Township," Rodriguez said, for working with the troop on this fun project.

In May, Troop 151 members are looking forward to an overnight field trip to San Francisco's California Academy of Sciences "Penguins + Pajamas" event. "The girls will be sleeping overnight inside the museum," Rodriguez said. "They can choose to sleep in the African Hall, Islands of Evolution, the Lower Swamp or next to the Aquarium of Penguins." Troop members will have unlimited access to the museum, including "The Rainforest of the World" exhibit, science-themed programming, two Planetarium showings, a late-night story hour, and all-day admission on the following day."
